Textbook policy

Each subject guide references an 'essential textbook' that will complement the reading in the guide. Students should make their own arrangements in the purchase of the relevant textbook. For guidance on purchasing textbooks online please refer to the following link

<http://www.londoninternational.ac.uk/booksonline>

Definitions

Essential reading means you must have access to these texts to complete the course successfully; either by buying your own copy or by accessing a copy in a library.

Further reading texts will enhance your understanding of the subject. You may wish to buy some of these, or access them in a library.

Casebooks are recommended to support your case law knowledge in a subject.

Statute books are often provided with your materials from the University. They are a useful aid and can be sometimes be taken into the examination, subject to the Programme regulations. We will only supply the statute books where students require these for the examinations. For guidance on what you take into the exam room please refer to the module syllabus available on the VLE

It is recommended that you buy the most recent edition of a text. Sometimes a new edition is published after the production of the booklist and subject guides. You will be able to use the section headings and the index to find the relevant readings in the new edition.
